The San Bernardino County Museum Association's 2009 Tom Bennett Art and Environmental Science Competition

Birds of a Feather

Birds live all around us. At any time, on any day, you can find birds out and about, looking for food, mates, or nesting sites. Some birds live in many places, while others restrict their lives to a single habitat type. Students get creative and have fun while learning about birds in their own backyards.

CALIFORNIA TOWHEE

Hundreds of students around the Inland Empire have enjoyed the Tom Bennett Art and Environmental Science Competition for over 20 years. The competition combines science and writing education with exploration of the natural environments around us. The staff members of the San Bernardino County Museum Association and the San Bernardino County Museum Education Division wish you and your students the best in this endeavor, and hope your students find opportunities to enjoy the birds in their neighborhoods, school yards, backyards and community parks.

WESTERN KINGBIRD

For this Tom Bennett Art and Environmental Science Competition, students research and create artworks depicting birds in their own inland ecosystem – desert, mountain, chaparral, or urban/suburban zones. Each student's art and written work is compiled in a class scrapbook for entry. Competition criteria reflect State of California Content Standards and include science and geography content and grade-level reading and writing skills.
