The pilot of a small airplane suffered a minor leg injury Saturday morning, Dec. 8, when his aircraft crashed into a building at Hesperia Airport, authorities said.

The crash happened at 10 a.m. when the red airplane landed, veered off the runway and struck an aqua-green metal hangar. One side of the building was pushed in by the nose of the plane. The pilot was the only person on board, said Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Ian Gregor.

The plane is a single-engine, experimental CH 750 Cruiser, Gregor said. It's the type of plane that comes in a kit and is assembled by the customer.

No one was in the building, said Cindy Bachman, a spokeswoman for the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department.

The FAA and National Transportation Safety Board were investigating the accident, said Eric Sherwin, spokesman for the San Bernardino County Fire Department.
